Agenda

What we'll discuss today

Budgeting isn't one-size-fits-all

A big part of budgeting is being intentional with where your money goes.

Today's Goal:

Align your spending with what truly matters to you.

Your Money, Your Values

What matters to you?

- Security
- Freedom
- Creativity
- Family
- Health
- Adventure
- Generosity
- Learning
- Recognition
- Independence
- Community
- Spirituality
- Success
- Fun
- Balance
- Respect
- Honesty
- Contribution
- Travel
- Comfort

What Matters Most

Value 1: Family

Because they're my support system, and I want to be able to spend quality time with them and provide for their well-being.

Value 2: Travel

Because seeing different cultures and new places broadens my perspective and creates lasting memories.

Value 3: Security

Because I want to feel stable and prepared for the future, knowing that I can handle unexpected events and not constantly worry about money.

Your Financial WHY

Avoiding Financial Stressors

8

- Accumulating more credit card debt
- Feeling stressed and anxious about unexpected bills
- Missing out on experiences due to lack of funds

Connecting Values and Money

Current Alignment

I currently spend money taking my family out to dinner once a month. This allows us to connect and spend quality time together.

Potential Improvement

Including more budget-friendly options like picnics in the park or game nights at home would allow us to do more together more frequently within the same overall budget.

What is the connection between budgeting and your values?

Will understanding your values help you make better money decisions?
